PRESIDENT'S CORNER

When I was in grammar school my father completed a master's degree in philosophy. He told us children that it was to be a master of arts degree and immediately I expected him to put on a paint-stained gown and beret and begin a career as a commercial artist. This image didn't please me at all. I was glad to learn that liberal arts was not restricted to art per se.

Perhaps the most revealing way to describe liberal arts education is to review its development through history. Its rootage extends all the way to ancient Greece when the two major subjects studied were music and gymnastics. Music, of course, included literature and artistic pursuits in general while gymnastics included everything from physical education to political science! Later when Rome came to dominate the world, the focus of education centered on the family and public life. It was designed to teach every male citizen to revere the gods, to read, to conduct himself with dignity, and to know the laws of his country. This was very practical education which emphasized civic and moral responsibility, but it had a rather narrow intellectual scope. However, as Greek influences were assimilated into Roman culture, rhetoric and philosophy again flourished.

With the spread of Christianity, education slowly came to perform a new task. The catechism was introduced and education was now designed to preserve the faith. This was fortunate, for later during the Dark Ages, the light of liberal education dimmed except for a tiny flicker in the monasteries.

To me the interesting development of this story is that Latin, the language of this time, became corrupted during the cultural drought of the barbarian occupation. An attempt to reform the language and to recapture its former greatness produced a revival in classical learning. Returning to classical literature to learn how Latin had been constructed made it possible not only to restore the language but also to rediscover the cultural heritage described in this literature. The result was the famous Carolingian revival in the eighth century.

One might say this revival marks the birth of liberal arts education as we know it, education which consisted of philosophy, theology and the seven liberal arts: grammar, dialectic, rhetoric, geometry, arithmetic, music, and astronomy. But perhaps I should explain what these names meant back then. Grammar included literature; rhetoric included logic, the study of law, and even the study of poetry. Geometry was more like geography and natural history than like modern geometry; and arithmetic was for the most part the study of the calendar! All in all, these subjects embraced most existing human knowledge. Subsequently, there have been periods of renaissance during which liberal education has attempted to encompass the spectrum of human experience, to transfer this from one generation to the next, and

HONORS CONVOCATION

Lycoming College students were recognized for academic excellence, campus leadership and athletic achievement at the 28th Annual Honors Convocation held April 11 in Clarke Chapel.

Lycoming's most prestigious honor, the Chieftain Award, went to LAURA M. COGHLAN, a senior from Westwood, N.J. The award goes annually to the student who, in the opinion of the students and faculty, "has contributed the most to Lycoming College through support of school activities; has exhibited outstanding constructive leadership qualities; who has worked efficiently and effectively with the members of the college community; who has evidenced a good moral code, and whose academic rank is in the upper half of the class."

Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, president of Lycoming, presented the Chieftain Award to Miss Coghlan and enumerated the many activities and achievements of the recipient during her matriculation at Lycoming.

The top awards for athletic achievement went to CINDY KELLOGG, a junior from Wall, N.J., who received the Pocahontas Award for her contributions to the field hockey team, and BILL CONROY, a senior from Philadelphia, who was given the Tomahawk Award after starring for the last four years on the Warrior basketball team.

GLENN KLAGES, a junior from Warren, N.J., received the Sol (Woody) Wolfe Award for "superior sports achievement" as a member of the Lycoming swimming and tennis teams, and PATRICIA RILEY, a senior from Bernardsville, N.J., was named "The Outstanding Woman of the Year" by the Women's Athletic Association.

Eight students were tapped for membership in Iruska, the society organized on the campus in 1954 to recognize "Warriors who win high honors." They include six juniors, ROBIN NEWMAN, of Gettysburg; JEFFREY STUBANAS, of Spring City; JOSEPH TANNANI, of Vestal, N.Y.; KENNETH SIBLEY,

Students and alumni of Lycoming College along with residents of the Williamsport business community participated in a career symposium entitled "Job Encounters of the First Kind" held Tuesday, March 28, in the Academic Center.

The symposium was sponsored by the Lycoming College Career Development Center and its student advisory group and was designed to provide an opportunity for students to meet with representatives from various professions to informally discuss the students' career options.

James G. Scott, a graduate of Lycoming and former assistant in our Admissions Office, delivered the keynote address following a noon luncheon. Scott, who is manager of professional placement for the Needham, Mass., plant of GTE-Sylvania focused his remarks on the qualities which employers are seeking when conducting a job interview.

More than 40 other Lycoming alumni and community leaders offered first-hand information regarding their careers and the job hunting process. Some of the participants traveled from as far as Boston and Philadelphia to participate in the program. Faculty members also joined in the free flow exchange of ideas and information.

Debra D'Aguillo, assistant dean of student services, said, "The symposium generated Convocation Day festivities were kicked off Tuesday afternoon with a tree planting ceremony at the corner of Ross and Mulberry Streets. Students, faculty and administrators participated in a program of contests and sporting events in the afternoon, and the faculty and staff were guests of the college at a dinner with the students in the college dining room.

Coach Rich Thomas and senior co-captains Dominic Johnson and Jay Jeffries head for the opening track meet with Haverford and Lebanon Valley.

Handicapped by weather, which not only limited practice but also wreaked havoc with the schedule after the season opened, the three Warrior spring sports teams were off to a slow start. Six of the first 13 events on the spring card had to be rescheduled because of the weather.

The Warrior tennis teams coached by Nels Phillips and the golf squad under the direction of Bob Foreman found it particularly difficult to practice before the season opened because both the tennis courts and the golf courses were under a blanket of snow almost up to the opening dates. Although the track team was unable to use the College Field facilities, members of the squad prepared for opening day with a conditioning program of running and exercises in the gymnasium and on the quad.

The lack of practice was reflected in the early season results when the only victory turned in by any of the three teams came from the golfers. The Warriors drubbed Penn State Capitol Campus but lost three matches to Dickinson, Lock Haven and Susquehanna.

The tennis team, with three freshmen in the lineup, shows promise of better things to come, but in the first four matches dropped all four to Upsala, Bloomsburg, Lock Haven and Western Maryland. The most consistent winner during the early matches was the top seed, Jeff Kauffman, a freshman from Hanover.

The track team failed to win in four meets with Haverford, Lebanon Valley, Dickinson and Western Maryland. Lack of depth on the squad has handicapped coach Rich Thomas. Co-captains Jay Jeffries and Dominic Johnson, seniors from Willingboro, N.J., have been the most dependable point winners for the Warrior thinlinds in early meets. Jeffries is featured in the sprints and Johnson performs in the field events. Johnson's specialty is the discus, where he captured first place in all the Warriors early meets.

FOOTBALL CO-CAPTAINS ELECTED

Offensive guard Fran Miller and defensive tackle Jerry Butler, two players who have been teammates since high school days, have been elected co-captains of the 1978 Warrior football team.

Both co-captains, who will be seniors in the fall, have been three-year starters for the Warriors and were teammates as scholastic players on the Archbishop Ryan High School team in Philadelphia. Both have been standouts at their respective positions during the three years at Lycoming, an era in which the Warriors compiled a record of 20 wins and only six losses. Lycoming had a 6-3 record last year, bouncing back to capture six of the final seven games after dropping the first two.

The 225-pound Butler, who was one of the top tacklers on the team last year with 91, was named to the Middle Atlantic Conference first team in 1977 and was honorable mention as a freshman and sophomore. Miller, who weighs 235 pounds and has also played offensive tackle during his college career, has been first team All-MAC for the last two years. He was also offensive co-captain last year when each of the offensive and defensive units had two captains.

thereby to retain the cultural tradition of the human race.

That is an ambitious assignment, isn't it? Yet this is at least the aim of liberal education. Consequently, we aren't content merely to learn some trade because life is much more than survival. We also need to learn why life is worth living and this is what liberal education is all about.

Dr. Guerra Lectures at Oxford University

Dr. Eduardo Guerra, Professor of Religion, was invited to give a lecture in semi-full session of the Sixth International Congress on Biblical Studies meeting at Oxford University, England, April 3-7. Dr. Guerra's lecture on the evening of April 5 was entitled Archaeological Work at Tell Halif and Ancient Rimmon. This is the new archaeological project in which Dr. Guerra and Lycoming students have participated during the last two summers.

The lecture presented what has been learned about the history of the tell from the chalcolithic period to the recent Islamic occupation with an emphasis on the Early and Late Bronze (Canaanite) and Iron (Israelite) periods. On the basis of archaeological evidence brought to light at Tell Halif in southern Israel, the lecture reopens speculation that Halif is the ancient Israelite city of Rimmon mentioned in Joshua 15:32 and abandoned at the end of the 8th century B.C. as a consequence of Sennacherib's invasion of western Judah.

This was Dr. Guerra's third presentation to the International Congress. He also read papers there in 1969 and 1973.

high levels of enthusiasm from both students and visiting professionals. The program succeeded in broadening the career horizons of Lycoming students as they learned of the applicability of their skills to the work world. Professionals also expressed satisfaction in knowing they had assisted young people in their career exploration. Hopes are that a career symposium will become an annual event at Lycoming College."

We add our special thanks to the 18 alumni who contributed their time and talent to this program:

Chemistry Day Attracts Interested H.S. Students

Approximately 45 students from six Central Pennsylvania high schools attended the Fifth Annual Lycoming College Chemistry Day on Saturday, April 1, on the college campus.

This year's program focused on activities involving extensive participation for the students from Mifflinburg, Bloomsburg, Mansfield, Freeland, Scranton and Towanda. Activities began Saturday morning and participants were given the opportunity to enter numerous chemical contests developed by the Lycoming Chemistry Department. Prizes were given to individual winners.

The program also included tours of the science building and demonstrations of experiments conducted by Lycoming chemistry students. The visiting students were able to perform experiments chosen from a variety of synthesis or analysis.

The day's activities concluded at 3:30 p.m. with a short color-slide show presented by the Chemical Society, followed by the popular "magic show" presentation entitled "Chemistry Illustrated."

Continuing Education Seminar Held on Campus

The Fourth Annual Continuing Education Seminar, sponsored by the Committee on Higher Education and Campus Ministry of the Central Pennsylvania Conference of The United Methodist Church met on campus April 4.

Approximately 50 ministers and laymen were in attendance for morning and afternoon sessions.

Dr. Richard Erickson, Assistant Professor of Astronomy and Physics, presented a lecture entitled "Star of Bethlehem" in the Detwiler Planetarium.

Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, President of Lycoming College, addressed the group at noon, his subject being "Toward 2000."

The third event was a lecture entitled "The Cain Complex" by Dr. Richard A. Hughes, Assistant Professor of Religion.

CLASS news

Edited by DALE V. BOWEN '39

1921
NORMAN R. WAGNER wrote recently and reminisced about the fact that he was president of his senior class and editor-in-chief of his yearbook. He is now 85 years of age. He enjoys playing golf in the summer and bowling once a week with a senior citizen group during the winter. He recently attended oil painting classes at York College and is now attending night classes at the York Art Association. He says he does "all things to the glory of God, who is so good to me".

1923
CHARLES E. SUBOCK, retired United Methodist minister, lives at Ashbury Methodist Home, Gaithersburg, MD. He writes that he will be unable to attend his 55th anniversary except in prayer and memory. He is 90 years of age and is still writing poetry.

1955
STEVE M. WOLF received one of thirteen residential design certificates of merit presented by the National Landscape Association. His certificate was for outstanding landscape design and planting at the entrance of a Miami home. Steve is the owner of Kendall Landscape Company of Miami. According to Steve, the objective of this design was to correlate the landscaping with the contemporary oriental design of the home. "We wanted to eliminate starkness, but still keep an oriental feeling. Thus, the water feature combined with the decking and footbridge." The 28 foot pond had to be dug by hand in solid coral rock. The hard corals boulders were brought in from central Florida since only porous coral rock was available locally. The pond, equipped with a small swimming pool pump and 2 h.p. pump, is stocked with Japanese carp, goldfish and water lilies to complete the natural illusion. Low-voltage lights allow the beauty of the waterfall and pond to be appreciated at night as well as by day.
